THE REPUBLICAN PLATFORM.

FOREIGN POLICY.

This platform gives an accurate picture of the present state of the Union, and of all the foreign affairs in which it is involved. It does not attempt to go beyond what is necessary to set forth the principles of the party, and to point out what must be done for the maintenance of the Union, and the preservation of its honor and independence. It is therefore a brief and concise statement of the policy of the party, and is not intended to be a comprehensive view of all the foreign affairs in which the country is engaged.

The following is a brief outline of the platform:

1. The maintenance of the Union.
2. The protection of our commerce.
3. The support of our armies and navies.
4. The preservation of our independence.

The platform is signed by the following gentlemen:

Jotham C. Garrison, Chairman.

HEROES AT WILLIAMSBURG.

A generous friend of mine has at last been able to procure me a ticket to the play, and I have spent a delightful evening attending the representations of the 'American scenery,' with a highly interesting and instructive one that is given weekly in the City of New York. The audience was composed of men and women of all ages and from all parts of the United States.

The play is a succession of scenes, enacted by actors, and accompanied by music and singing. The acting is excellent, and the singing is particularly admired. The play is called 'A Certain Country,' and is based on the life of a young man named John Smith, who emigrated to America from England and became a successful farmer.

The play begins with John Smith's arrival in the New World. He is a hardworking man, and quickly gains the respect of his neighbors. He is joined by his wife, Mary, and they start a small farm. The play follows their life as they work, save, and eventually become prosperous farmers.

The play is a beautiful example of American life and values. It shows the hard work and determination of the pioneers, and the importance of family, hard work, and saving money.

The audience was highly impressed with the play. Many commented on the excellent acting and the beautiful music. Some said it was the best play they had ever seen.

After the play, the audience was given an opportunity to thank the actors and musicians for their excellent performance. The actors and musicians were very gracious and thanked the audience for their support and audience.

In conclusion, the play 'A Certain Country' is a beautiful example of American life and values. It shows the hard work and determination of the pioneers, and the importance of family, hard work, and saving money. The audience was highly impressed with the play, and the actors and musicians were very gracious and thanked the audience for their support and audience.
