[News and articles, including "Thanksgiving sermon"]

HENRY WARD BEECHER

"And there are settlements with him on the borders of his people: he found the place where he set them: he marked it on the book. He remembered all his vineyards, and his grass, and his olive trees, and his lees. He remembered also his flocks and his herds, and his servants and his servants' servants, and he remembered them with a strange memory." (Deuteronomy 11:12-13)

This sermon, which Mr. Beecher made, is one of the most beautiful, and one of the most deeply moving, that I have ever heard. It was delivered before a large audience, and it was received with the greatest applause. The subject of the sermon was the "Thanksgiving of the Hebrews," and it was delivered with great power and beauty.

The stirring up of the political passions has been in a great measure checked, and the public mind is now at ease. The Union is the subject of general consent. The interests, rights, and improvement of the country are now on a level which has been long desired. The spirit of discord has been banished, and the spirit of harmony and conciliation is now in full force. The Union is the subject of general consent.

THE POLITICS - AFTER THE ELECTION

We frequently find that the ignorant are always ready to believe what is new and what is, perhaps, the reverse of what is generally understood. The popular idea that "Mr. Lincoln is a different man" is diffused, and is likely to be correctly understood, by the rejection of the doctrine that he is a different man. The New York Tribune, a well-known journal, has recently published an article on the subject, and we are happy to be able to copy it in full.

The article is as follows:

"The New York Tribune, December 24, 1860

Mr. Lincoln is a different man than is generally understood. The reason for this is that he is a different man in many respects. He is a different man in his personal appearance. His face is not the same, his voice is not the same, his manner is not the same. He is a different man in his ideas. He is more independent, more original, more original in his ideas.

A MARRIAGE.—Our citizens are presented every day with the news of marriages. The marriage of foreign origin is always a matter of interest to the public, and is frequently the subject of much speculation and discussion. It is not uncommon to hear of marriages in the newspapers, and it is not uncommon to hear of marriages in the newspapers. It is not uncommon to hear of marriages in the newspapers. The news of Mr. Breckinridge, of Florida, is shocking to the public, and the news of Mr. Clay and Mr. Webster, of Alabama, is equally as shocking.
It is believed that Mr. Breckinridge is dead, and that Mr. Clay and Mr. Webster are seriously ill.

RURAL MATTERS.

LEAVES AT WINTER.

Farmers, permit me to point out to you as an object of especial concern, that many of your fields now lie barren and not allowed partly to blow wind, which has a tendency to make them the more unproductive next season. Though the amount of such land may not be very extensive, yet in many cases it may be increased by a judicious rotation of crops, it being the object of our labors to bring every acre of arable land into better cultivation. In this respect, the farmer who is willing to devote himself to this object, not only will increase his income, but will also find that good practice. Better habits, in the shape of better land, are more important to the true farmer than any number of acres that are not properly cultivated. The farmer has a field to be found in your neighborhood, will the soil of the next season, you know, that good practice.

There are several reasons why barnyard manures are often neglected, but none that can be excused as valid. For one thing, we have the advantage of the natural manure of the farm, which is devoid of all extraneous materials. It contains no wood ash, and is more and more extensively used, and is to be highly commended.

Kerrisburg, November 15.

The use of Dr. Hume's Remedy has been found to be most efficacious in the treatment of diseases of the eye. It is a preparation of the best quality, and is recommended by physicians in the highest opinion of its efficacy.

The greatest delight in looking at objects is windows and dwelling houses from the sash, and the parts of the house in an atmosphere deprived of moisture. They are admired on account of their lights and colors, and the window space so frequent as to be considered a definite point of interest. In this respect, the farmer has a field to be found in your neighborhood, will the soil of the next season, you know, that good practice.
