The Old Flag of the Confederacy.

The Old Flag of the Confederacy was a symbol of the South's fight for independence. The flag, also known as the "Stars and Bars," was adopted by the Confederate States of America in 1861.

The flag featured a blue field with white stars and red and white stripes. The design was inspired by the Union Jack, the flag of the United Kingdom. The Confederate States of America used the flag to represent their independence and their struggle against the Union.

The flag was first flown over Fort Sumter in South Carolina on April 12, 1861, and it became a symbol of the South's resistance to the Union's efforts to bring about a united, federal government.

The flag was carried into battle by Confederate troops and was seen throughout the Civil War. After the war, the flag was retired and stored away. Today, it is displayed in museums and other locations as a symbol of the South's history and its struggle for independence.

The Old Flag of the Confederacy is a reminder of the South's fight for independence and its important role in the history of the United States.
