The Franklin Repository

CHAMBERSBURG, PA., WEDNESDAY, MAY 11, 1864.

VOL. 71—NO. 3090.

THE GRAND ADVANCE ON RICHMOND.

ARMS OF THE CUMBERLAND.

The Confederate Federation is a powerful factor in the war. It has been in close cooperation with the Union forces, and has enabled them to maintain a strong line of defense. The Confederate army is well disciplined and organized, and is capable of fighting a long war. The Union forces are stronger in numbers, but the Confederates have a greater number of trained officers and men.

THE REPUBLIC LIVES.

The Great Struggle with Tragedy.

TWO DAYS OF TERRIBLE CONFLICT.

The Rebel Drive at All Points.

The Great Drive Southward.

General Grant Reaffirms.

The Confederates Follow.

LONGSTREET MORTALLY WOUNDED.

The First Crack for Richmond took place between Lee and Grant, when the latter's troops crossed the James River. The Confederates were able to hold their ground, but were forced to retreat. The Union forces followed closely, and were able to capture a large number of prisoners.

THE CONFEDERATE SIDE.

The Confederates were able to hold their ground, but were forced to retreat. The Union forces followed closely, and were able to capture a large number of prisoners.

The Union forces were able to capture a large number of prisoners. The Confederates were able to hold their ground, but were forced to retreat. The Union forces followed closely, and were able to capture a large number of prisoners.
The Franklin Repository, May 11, 1864.

Franklin Repository.

[Article text]

---

The article text is not fully visible in the image. It appears to be a historical newspaper article discussing political and military events. The content includes references to the American Civil War, political figures, and possibly local news. The text is too fragmented to provide a coherent summary or transcription.