The Franklin Repository, Chambersburg, Pa.

May 31, 1865.

WASHINGTON, May 27th.

The Washington Star reports that the President has signed two important bills. The first bill is the Army Appropriation Bill, which provides for the salaries of the President, Vice President, and other officers of the Government. The second bill is the Revenue Act, which increases the tax on alcoholic beverages.

The President has also signed the Homestead Bill, which grants 160 acres of federal land to any citizen who will live on it for five years. The bill has been controversial, with some senators opposing it because they believe it will lead to an increase in the population of the West.

The President has also signed the Morrill Act, which provides for the establishment of land-grant colleges. The act has been opposed by some members of Congress who believe it will lead to an increase in the cost of higher education.

The President has also signed the Civil Rights Bill, which guarantees the right to vote to all citizens, regardless of race. The bill has been opposed by some members of Congress who believe it will lead to an increase in the political power of the African American community.

The President has also signed the Pease Act, which provides for the expansion of the Union Army. The act has been supported by some members of Congress who believe it will lead to a quicker end to the Civil War.

The President has also signed the Garfield Act, which provides for the establishment of a national park system. The act has been opposed by some members of Congress who believe it will lead to an increase in the cost of travel.
