The Indicator

FRIDAY, OCT. 20, 1860

NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION

H. V. JOHNSON

DEMOCRATIC ELECTION PRESS

GRAND RALLY

NATIONAL DEMOCRACY

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1860

The Convention of Angel's, and the standing delegates to the Grand

Convention of the Democratic Party, met in the city of Chicago,

on Tuesday, the 19th inst., for the purpose of choosing the

nominees of the Democratic Party for the coming election.

The Convention was held in the Grand Opera House, under the auspices of the Democratic Convention of the State of Illinois.

The Convention was opened by the Chairman, Mr.

H. V. Johnson, who

announced the names of the

nominees of the Democratic

Party for President and Vice President.

Mr. Johnson then

addressed the Convention,

and delivered a speech

in which he declared the Democratic Party to be the party of the people, and

pledged himself and the Democratic Party to stand

for the principles of

republicanism and progress.

The Convention then

voted to accept the

nominees of the Democratic

Party for President and

Vice President.

The Convention then

adjourned.

The next day, the Convention met in the same place, and proceeded to consider the platform of the Democratic Party.

The platform was

adopted by a vote of 100 to 0.

The platform of the Democratic Party was considered to be a

declaration of the

principles of the

Democratic Party, and

was adopted as a

guide for the

Democratic candidates

in the coming election.

The platform was

considered to be a

declaration of the

principles of the

Democratic Party, and

was adopted as a

guide for the

Democratic candidates

in the coming election.