SOUTHERN LADIES.

A sweeping view of Virginia was taken during the late war by the officers of the Richmond Examiner, which has just published a most elegant treatise on the subject. It is a beautiful work, and is deserving of the highest praise. The subject is one of the most interesting and important that can be found in the world. The treatment is brief and concise, and the manner of presentation is simple and pleasing. It is a work of the highest merit, and is deserving of the highest commendation.

In conclusion, we would say that the work is a valuable contribution to the literature of the South, and is a demonstration of the strength and vigor of the Southern mind.

The following article from the New York Evening Post, contains a description of various battles in different cities, while, in one case, a famous battle fought at the Cape before the war—

The battle of the Cape was fought on the 21st of April, 1861, and was a decisive victory for the Union. The Union forces, under the command of General Hooker, took the field in strength and were able to carry the day. The battle was fought near the village of Cape, and was a battle of great importance in the history of the war.

The Union forces were led by General Hooker, and the Confederate forces were led by General Lee. The battle was fought near the village of Cape, and was a battle of great importance in the history of the war.

THE WORKMAN'S SONG.

Who rules the dead and the poor?
An empty echo from shore.
A sadder round, a sadder round,
A sadder round for a sadder sound.

The starry skies of old,
And the pathless track on the roof.
A sadder round, a sadder round,
A sadder round for a sadder sound.
