THE FRIENDLESS CHILD.

By MAN KAY

The story of a little girl named Kay, who lived in Sing Sing, is perhaps one of the most pathetic and touching stories ever told. Kay was a small, delicate little girl, with bright, expressive eyes, and a sweet, innocent smile. She had no friends, and no one seemed to care for her. Her parents had died when she was very young, and she had been left alone in the world.

Kay lived in a small, shabby cottage on the outskirts of the town, and she spent most of her time playing in the fields and woods. She was a happy child, but she was lonely, and she longed for someone to love her.

One day, Kay was out in the fields, picking wild flowers, when she met a kind old man named Mr. White. Mr. White was an artist, and he was always on the lookout for interesting subjects for his paintings. He saw Kay playing in the fields, and he was struck by her innocent beauty.

Mr. White approached Kay, and he introduced himself. He explained that he was an artist, and he asked Kay if he could paint her portrait. Kay was overjoyed, and she agreed to let Mr. White paint her.

Over the next few weeks, Mr. White painted several portraits of Kay. He was fascinated by her beauty, and he was moved by her innocence. He knew that he had found the perfect subject for his next great work of art.

Finally, the day arrived when Mr. White would reveal his masterpiece to the world. He invited Kay to a grand party at his studio, where he would unveil his portrait of her. Kay was nervous, but she was excited.

As the party began, Mr. White stepped forward and introduced Kay to the crowd. He thanked her for allowing him to paint her portrait, and he explained that it would be unveiled that evening.

The crowd was thrilled, and they applauded as Mr. White unveiled his masterpiece. It was a beautiful portrait, capturing Kay's innocent beauty in all its glory.

Kay was overjoyed, and she ran up to Mr. White to thank him. But as she hugged him, she realized that she had been forgotten. Mr. White had painted a portrait of her, but he had forgotten to include her in it.

Kay was heartbroken, and she ran out of the studio, sobbing. She knew that she had been taken advantage of, and she felt lonely and alone once again.

But then, something miraculous happened. A kind old lady named Mrs. Green saw Kay crying, and she invited her to join her at her tea party. Mrs. Green was a kind, gentle woman, and she cared for Kay like a mother.

From that day on, Kay was never alone again. Mrs. Green took her under her wing, and she introduced her to new friends. Kay was overjoyed, and she knew that she had found a new family.

And so, the story of Kay, the friendless child, ended. She lived Happily ever after, surrounded by love and friendship. And whenever she looked at the portrait of herself that Mr. White had painted, she knew that she was not alone in the world.
VALLEY SPIRIT.
CHAMBERSBURG, PA.
CIRCULATION 3,300 COPIES.
Saturday, Dec. 4, 1858.
A. M.
Mr. Douglas' Failure.

Mr. Douglas' failure in the Senate, in the view of many, is generally regarded as an unfortunate result of his action on the Texas convention question. He has gained a number of friends by his personal attributes, but few of his political friends approve of his recent action. His first attempt to lead the opposition from the support of the present National Administration, from which the Whigs make it a matter of policy to exclude any attempt at interference, was not successful. He did not succeed in doing any important piece of work.

His next attempt to avoid embarrassment for himself, and to make himself popular with his constituents, and to win back the only possible defender of the doctrine of free trade, was to support the bill to obtain the repeal of the tariff. This measure was not successful, and the Whigs were divided among themselves as to its wisdom. The majority of the members of the National Administration, and the majority of the members of the Senate, voted against the measure, and the majority of the House voted for it. The result was that the measure was defeated.

Mr. Douglas, his hopes of popularity, and his hopes of being re-elected to the Senate, were dashed by the vote of the Whigs. He was thrown into the minority, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition. He was compelled to be in the minority, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compelled to take a position in the opposition, and was compel...