CHAPTER II.

I understood that I had a large quantity of work before me, but I could not resist the temptation to see the capital of the world. I made up my mind to let the matter of the work wait until tomorrow, and see the city first.

"Let us go," said the newspaper, "and see the city."

"I wish," I replied, "that I had more time to spend in going about the city."

"You will have time," said the newspaper, "when you are in the city."
