CHAMBERSBURG, PA.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, APRIL 25, 1860.

NUMBER 44.

CONGRESSIONAL REPUBLICAN.

People living at a distance from the metropolitan centers, and reading the reports of the Congress, are doubtless surprised to learn that almost the entire Congress consists of Democratic or Whig members, and that Republican men are so few in number and influence as to be regarded as an insignificant minority, if such they are. They would see in the House of Representatives only two or three Republicans, and one or two in the Senate. Without a doubt, this statement is correct; but it is not true that the Republicans form so small a minority as has been supposed. They are not only present, but their influence is increasing daily.

There is no lack of energy and ability among the Republican members of Congress; but they are not sufficient to enable them to carry their views through both houses. The Democratic and Whig parties are too powerful to be overcome by a single vote, and the Republicans must therefore be content to vote their opinions without expecting any result. This is their position, and they must bear it.

The Republican party has made great strides during the last few years, and has succeeded in gaining control of several state legislatures. It is very likely that they will be able to establish themselves in power in many more states before the next presidential election.

Gove and the Republican.
The Gove and the Republican publish a letter from a gentleman in Virginia, who states that the Republican party is rapidly gaining ground in that state. The letter is dated April 20th, and is as follows:

"Sir,--I have been conversing with some friends here who are Republicans, and I am inclined to believe that the party is gaining ground in this state. They say that the people are beginning to understand the importance of the Union, and that they are determined to vote for the Republican candidate in the next election. They believe that the people will see that the Democrats are not able to protect the country, and that they will turn to the Republicans to save it.

"I have been told that the Republicans are gaining ground in other states, and I think it is probable that they will be able to establish themselves in power in many more states before the next presidential election. The party is in a very strong position, and I have no doubt that they will be able to carry the election.

"Yours truly,

"[Name]."
The end of a summer's casement.
A love story:

Men are never so unkind, never so unappreciative, never so despising, as when they are making love. A friend of mine, a lady, I believe, told me that her husband was just as good as ever, but that his attitude towards her was something terrible. He had become so used to her that he no longer felt the need to show the same affection as before. It was a difficult time for her, as she had grown used to being adored and cherished by her husband. The love they had shared had been constant, but now it seemed to have withered away.

But as she sat in her garden one day, a thought entered her mind. If her husband had once loved her as much as she loved him, then perhaps there was still hope for their relationship. She decided to take matters into her own hands and make a change.

She began by spending more time with him. She would sit by his side, holding his hand, and would tell him of her thoughts and feelings. He would listen, and slowly, but surely, the love that had been lost began to return.

And so, after many months of hard work, they found themselves in love again. The end of a summer's casement has been a beautiful thing, and it has shown us all that love can be renewed and strengthened even in the most difficult of times.
