SWEET SORROW.

The following letter was recently received from Mr. James Henry, of the "Heavens" in Atlanta, Georgia:

"Dear Miss Davis: I have just received your letter and I am much obliged to you for your kind offer. I am sorry to hear that you have had a hard time of it. I hope you will soon be able to get back to your farm and enjoy your work. I am sending you a dozen of my best eggs, hoping you will find them suitable for your use. If you need anything else, don't hesitate to ask me.

Yours very truly,

James Henry."

THE DEMONSTRATION.

The demonstration of the Southern farmers in favor of the "Black Star" movement was a great success. The farmers were very much impressed with the speeches of the speakers, who dwelt at length upon the importance of the movement. The demonstration was held in the main street of the city, and a large crowd gathered to hear the proceedings. The speeches were made by Mr. Brown, Mr. White, and Mr. Green, who spoke with great force and eloquence.

THE HANNAH SECRET.

Once upon a time, in a little town called "Sunbeam," there lived a girl named Hannah. She was a kind-hearted, gentle soul, and everyone loved her. However, there was something special about her. She had a secret, a secret that no one knew about. It was a secret that she had kept for many years.

One day, Hannah told her best friend, Sarah, her secret. Sarah was shocked and amazed, but she promised Hannah that she would never tell anyone. Hannah was relieved and grateful, but little did she know that her secret was about to spill out into the world.

The next day, Hannah went to the general store to buy some groceries. As she was paying for her items, she noticed a strange man watching her from across the room. He was tall, with wild hair, and was dressed in a torn and dirty suit. Hannah tried to ignore him, but the man approached her, whispering in her ear, "You have a secret, don't you?

Hannah was shocked and scared, but she tried to keep her composure. She turned around and glared at the man, but he just laughed and walked away.

That night, Hannah couldn't sleep. She was riddled with guilt and fear. She had to do something, but what? She didn't know what to do.

Finally, Hannah decided to tell her secret. She went to her best friend, Sarah, and told her everything. Sarah was supportive and understanding, and promised to keep her secret safe.

From that day on, Hannah's life changed. She was no longer afraid of her secret, and she was able to live a happy and fulfilling life. She never forgot the lesson she learned that day, and she always remembered that it is better to be honest and true, and to let your secrets out in the open, rather than hide them inside you, where they can cause you pain and suffering.
