THE TUNNEL.

A RACE.

A new story by Charles Coleridge.

May 7, 1807. In the Penny Market, a man, standing on the platform, was selling oranges. Among the other goods for sale, there were apples, pears, peaches, plums, and a good supply of vegetables. He was an attractive young man, with a pleasant smile that greeted customers with a friendly greeting.

New Haywood—At 7 p.m., New Haywood, the young man’s friend, arrived. He was dressed in a black coat and a white shirt, with a red tie around his neck. He was carrying a bag over his shoulder, which he placed on the ground as he greeted New Haywood.

I saw this as an opportunity to do something good. I decided to help New Haywood, who seemed to be in a hurry. I offered to carry his bag for him, and he accepted gratefully.

In the meantime, the man on the platform continued to sell his goods. He was very busy, and I noticed that he was struggling to keep up with the demands of his customers.

As I helped New Haywood, I noticed a change in his attitude. He seemed to be more relaxed and less stressed. In fact, he was even smiling as he thanked me for my help.

In the end, I realized that sometimes, even the smallest acts of kindness can make a big difference in someone’s life. And that’s something that I will always remember.
