The inaugural address of Mr. Lincoln.

It would have been almost as instructive to have been present at the inauguration of President Lincoln's first administration, as to have been at the inaugural address of Mr. Lincoln, who was then President of the United States. The 1860 election, which we have been told by Mr. Lincoln himself, was a very close one, and the results of the election were not known until several days after they were made public. The inaugural address of Mr. Lincoln was given on the 19th of March, 1861, and was delivered at the Capitol in Washington, D.C. The address was printed in the official copies of the address, and is as follows:

Inauguration of Abraham Lincoln as President of the United States.

The capital city of the United States is the home of the government, and the seat of the executive, legislative, and judicial departments of the Union. It is the center of the country, and the point of departure for all parts of the Union. It is the home of the President of the United States, and the residence of the members of Congress. It is the center of the country, and the point of departure for all parts of the Union. It is the home of the President of the United States, and the residence of the members of Congress.
