The Democratic and the President.

The Democracy, throughout the country are appealing President Lincoln in the ground that he has taken against the emancipation policy of the Administration. The Democracy will stand where they are on that question. They have always opposed emancipation, and they will do so still without a compromise. The majority of the Republicans or any other party not in favor of emancipation for the Southern States, now in arms against the Government, or if it is in arms against the Constitution, Congress, including all feeling that is on the war side, is now appealing to President Lincoln to make an appeal to the Democracy for a compromise. So we have had various appeals from Congress, and appeals to the President for a compromise. The President is not appealing to the Democracy, but he is appealing to the people in general, and he is appealing to the people of the North for his war.

The Democracy is very much alarmed at the expression of the President. They are not satisfied with the President's appeal to the Democracy.
