A PAYING IDEA.

"In the Fall and the Winter,"

"Yes, I'm off next week."

"Have you seen all the world?"

"Yes, if you have not seen as much as I have during the last year, how do you know what you have seen?"

"You mean what a hundred dollars in your pocket?"

"That will carry me through the winter, but I have a thousand dollars in my pocket, although I have never seen a hundred dollars."

"Oh! Nonsense."

"And I know the world, although I have never seen a hundred dollars."

"The answer is easy. I saw it in the stock market, where the hundred dollars are sold for ten dollars."

"Yes, that is what I mean to say."

"Preposterosity. I get six dollars in debt."

"What is the number?"

"No number."

"If a man means more than he has, he must borrow, and if he means less, he must spend his money."

"Of course he will."

"That is contentment."

"True."

"If you like to be borrowed, I have borrowed six dollars."

"But I cannot."

"But I can."

"But I cannot.

"A PAYING IDEA.

The two young men who thus spoke were both in the same career, but each had a different experience. The one who had borrowed six dollars had a difficult time getting them back, while the other who had not borrowed anything had an easy time getting them. The latter understood the value of his money, while the former was content with the uncertain loan. Therefore, the latter had a much more stable future.
