In the impending struggle between the friends of the government, and the opposition in the North, there is nothing sadder than to see the intend-bitterness manifested by the less maned party—it seems to resemble most of all that coorgatrated malice which free plant the batteries against our bosowed flag at Fort Summer, or still later, with Rand bayonet hurled isself is desperate but unsvailing valor against the surery of the nation as Gestraburg. One mode has to glasses at their state and coday ty organs to find them overflowing with bit sermed. There is every degree of it, from that which gives coloring to nice hitle stories of the war, insidicately adendated for stirring up partisan blood, to open, farious tired against every act of the administration. We are not surprised at this, for it has always been the distinguishing mark of a lad cause. Nor yet does the vigor with which they seek to compass their ends and the measure of success that accompanies it fill us with wooder. Zoal fired by malice often outrons truth in its onward steady march and the deal sweets no small amount of his morees to his diligence. At the same time avery right minded citizen looks with airm at the results of such conduct. Already have their ounning appeals to party seal and blind prijudice, their constant outry about "oppressave traxition," the associations of the conscription act to the "poor" done too successfully their work. The poor have been excited against the rick, one laboring class against another, while riot and bloodshed much as would put to shame a heathen astion have followed as the legitimate consequences of such teaching. We have been pained to hear men in our own community, fresh from the reading of a tory apage, express themselves in this way: "We poor men have nothing to lose by this way yet we have done the fighting. We will now stand back until the rick, shoulder arms." From the same the backs, on the ground that they will take the place and lower the character of norther laborers. But we claim, as the distinguishing excellency of our government, the perfections with which it accurse the rights of all, high, low, rich sized with. While sill takes we have a common humanity are interested in our government, the perfections with which it accuracy the rights of all, high, tow, rich add below. Which all chairs who love a common humanity are interested in its perpetuity, and the overthrow of this value bellion, the poor man is especially so. It matters little under what government the rich live; wealth, under any circumstance, must command influence and station. But it makes every difference to the poor man. When a proud aristocrasy looks down upon him, when he no longer stands their peer at the ballot-box; when he finds certain avenue to honor and influence is society closed against him, then indeed has he lost most reinously.
