MISCELLANEOUS.

MOLLIE, THE BELL-RINGER.

READER, I suppose you have heard of Greenland, the Greenland we used to point out on our maps at school, and "bound" with gib tongues—and devoted especially in her vivid imaginations to Arctic snows and skies, seals, walrus, polar bears, and a race scarce more civilized—also the same locality whose "icy mountains" we have so often heard pointed in falsetto, treble, and bass voices, at missionary prayer meetings—yet we most respectfully beg to assure you that the Greenland within whose precincts (and at a date somewhat anterior to the present) the locale of our story is laid, differs widely from that in question, inasmuch as we present to your view one of the pleasantest, most rural farming towns in New England, and for the sake of being explicit we will say in the old honored "Granite State."

slow, who always "joined in" with his approval, and then, sometimes passed to listen to her song, and she heard to her knowledge, that she had looked like a picture and sang like an angel—while upward, self-sufficient, the young man, who was as much in love with my school-girl Mollie as his own self-esteem would allow him to be in love with any one but himself, played the big game and with more than his wonted vigor, whenever he obtained to catch the laughing blue eyes looking up from the singing book upon him.

And while Mollie sat there and thought little of the matter, with her great bold blue eyes and her peppy red cheeks, had never seemed so disagreeable or spiteful as then, and wondered when "somebody," whom her heart told her was none other than Harry March, had come home from town, white with cold, and at the window in silent thought, and her mother bustled about preparing dinner in the adjoining kitchen, something very like a tear dropped down from her hand and there upon the knitting work in her lap.

ing later, when our lover, with a group of other young persons, were gathered at night, and a small sheet or canopy, from which a flight of doves soared up to the great bell, and there hung the bell rope, and, in the particular Sunday, the station being the sturdy Hessian Rhodus' station, was did good execution by way of stamping the bell to call together the good Greenlanders to worship.

And in the hour for afternoon services drew near, the usual order to leave the laughing, chattering group, just when Mollie's smiles were sweetest and Harry had progressed wonderfully with Melitabile Jenson, and resumed his task of bell-ringing. And Mollie, who had no idea of standing there, an observer of her rival's triumph—also to show Harry how unaccountable she was, turned away with unconcerned satisfaction, to stand in the doorway of the little closet where her fatherly way lastly at the bell rope.

THE SNACK IN SCHOOL. The following incident in a District School, described by Mr. W. M. P. in the N. Y. Herald, is an address before the Literary Society in Stockbridge, Mass. It is a very fine piece of work, and has been translated into early English.

THE TWENTY-FIFTH PSALM.

To Thee I lift my soul, O Lord, In Thee I trust and in Thy word, Anahel, let me never be, Let not my foes triumph o'er me

Touch me Thy plagues, show me Thy way, Lead me in truth to Thy prayer; On Thee my salvation, Thy mercy, On Thee I wait from day to day.

Thy faithful sin remember not, Transgressions may do thee blot; Thy loving kindness, O how free! How ever good, will ever be!

Thou art me, my sin forgive, And let me in Thy love abide; The trouble of my heart remove, Teach me to pray, Al! Thou to love.

A Railroad to the Pacific.

It is to be hoped that some one of the various propositions before Congress for constructing a Railroad to the Pacific will be adopted at the present session. The necessity for such a highway across the country is becoming clearer every day.

We must maintain a considerable military force west of the Rocky mountains, and the supplies for this force must be furnished from the eastern division of the country. The Mormon rebellion demonstrated the difficulty and expense of transporting large supplies by means of wagon trains.

The county herbage of the plains that stretch from the Kansas river up to the Rocky mountains, will support but a limited number of herds of burthen in a single season. Their capacity to sustain animal life has been put to its utmost stretch, and we know how many men we owe to the other side of the Rocky mountains, with supplies drawn from the Atlantic slope.

After the holiday recess, Congress re-assembled on Tuesday. The attendance of members was slow at the opening, but the absentees have since very generally repaired to their posts.

The old Senate chamber was insufficient to hold the multitude of ladies and gentlemen who repaired thither to witness the removal of the Senate to its new hall. The scene was impressive. After the Committee of Arrangements had submitted their report, Mr. CRITCHFIELD, the venerable Senator from Kentucky, in moving their adoption, indulged in some appropriate remarks.

developed itself among members in relation to the location of the road. This feeling has been most strongly manifested by certain fanatical Black Republicans, who, while loudly proclaiming themselves in favor of a Railroad, yet would evidently rather kill off the road than allow it to be laid down on any but a Northern route.

A middle route, if practicable, would be most advantageous to the whole country, from the facility it would afford for connecting both from the North and the South, but a road by any route over which it can be constructed and worked, will be worth a thousand times more to the country than the country will ever be called upon to pay for it.

Nothing of general importance or interest transpired in the House in the early part of the week. Tuesday's session was consumed in receiving reports from the various committees, and on Wednesday the death of Gen. QUINCY was announced and the House adjourned.

After the holiday recess, Congress re-assembled on Tuesday. The attendance of members was slow at the opening, but the absentees have since very generally repaired to their posts.

On Wednesday Senator BIGLER, of this State, addressed the Senate in favor of the Pacific Railroad Bill, now pending before that body. He spoke of the various routes proposed, and said he preferred a central location, but was willing to leave the decision of that question to be determined by the results of scientific investigation, and by those business considerations which might properly influence such a question.

On Thursday, the Pacific Railroad Bill being again under consideration, Mr. LIVERMAN, of Georgia, addressed the Senate. He complained of the disposition of Northern members to locate the road as to deprive the South of a participation in its benefits, and said he "believed the same would come when the slave States would be compelled, in violation of their rights, their interests and their honor, to separate from the free States and erect a separate confederacy."

On Friday the Railroad bill came up again, when Gen. BRINLEY, of Minnesota, made some remarks in favor of the Northern route, as proposed by Gen. STEVENS, from St. Paul to Puget's Sound. He said it was the most practicable route, and claimed that it would be better than any other route.

meant by instructing the committee to report a bill for three routes, to be selected by three boards of engineers. This basis Mr. Liverman's proposition "all better." But hadn't we better try the central route first, and then build the Northern and the Southern where we find they are needed.

The Senate concluded its session on Friday by adjourning till Monday, Saturday being the anniversary of the battle of New Orleans.

Nothing of general importance or interest transpired in the House in the early part of the week. Tuesday's session was consumed in receiving reports from the various committees, and on Wednesday the death of Gen. QUINCY was announced and the House adjourned.

On Friday the Speaker laid before the House the following message from the President:

On the last day of the last session of Congress, as appears by the journal of the House of Representatives, a joint resolution was passed for the carrying of the United States mails from St. Joseph, Missouri, to Louisville, Ky. The resolution authorized and directed the Postmaster General to order an increase of speed upon said route, requiring the mails to be carried through in thirty days, instead of thirty-eight days, according to the existing contract, provided the same could be done upon a proportionate increase of compensation to the contractors.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, announced to the House that the Senate bill for the admission of Oregon was in his desk and ready to be reported the first time the Committee on Territories should be reached by Tuesday next. The bill was ordered to be printed.

This distinguished gentleman made his first appearance this winter in Washington on Thursday evening last. A grand demonstration on his arrival had been talked of, but it did not take place.

It has been supposed by some that Mr. DOUGLASS would become an independent candidate for the Presidency, but this supposition is not at all true by the Chicago Times, which is regarded as the organ of the distinguished Senator. That paper says Mr. DOUGLASS will permit his friends to bring him before the Democratic Convention for nomination, and whether successful or not he will support the nominee.

APPROVED BY THE SENATE

On the approval of the Senate from the 23rd of December.

I have been charged by the committee on the subject of the proposed building of a Chamber which has no long been occupied by the Senate. In the progress of our country and the growth of the population, the House has become too contracted for the representation of the Southern States, and now to exist, and accordingly you are about to exchange it for a hall affording ample accommodations for the present and the future.

On the 23rd of December, 1861, it was resolved to remove to the city of New York, and to remain there until the building on the Dela ware should be completed, and accordingly, on the 23rd of January, 1862, the Congress met in New York, where they continued to hold sessions until the Confederation gave place to the Constitution.

The commission to lay out a town on the Delaware reported their proceedings to the Congress, and on further steps were taken for the erection of a hall for the residence of the House. When the bonds of stone were drawn closer by the organization of the new government under the Constitution, on the 3d of March, 1790, the subject was revived and discussed with great interest.

In the midst of these disputes, the House of Representatives resolved "that the permanent seat of government ought to be at some convenient place on the banks of the Chesapeake Bay, and that a bill to that effect be introduced into the Senate."

The same act provided that Congress should hold its sessions at Philadelphia until the first Monday in November, 1800, when the government should remove to the district erected on the Potomac. This was settled a question which had been pending for some time between the States. But all difficulties were not surmounted; for Congress, either from indifference or want of money, failed to make adequate appropriations for the erection of public buildings, and the committees were often reduced to great straits to maintain the progress of the work.

The corner of the United States cannot be named without that of any other people of whom the history gives account. It is almost impossible to speak of the progress of the Republic without mentioning the name of the illustrious man who has been the source of its greatness.

The Senate continued to occupy the north wing, and the House of Representatives the south wing of the Capitol, until the 23rd of August, 1814, when the British army entered the city and burned the public buildings. This occurred during the reign of the President James Madison. The British troops had been driven out of the city by the American forces, but they had already burned the Capitol and the Executive Mansion.

On the 6th of December, 1819, the Senate adjourned for the first time in two centuries, and the House of Representatives adjourned for the first time in more than thirty-nine years, and now the strife and uncertainties of the past are finished, we are about to see every side of the public stability and improvement, and a happy and prosperous future.

of banks, has been so long extended, and acknowledged, throughout the Union, that it is no longer an open question. But it must be acknowledged that the power has been grossly abused. The delegation of the arbitrary sovereignty to all persons of responsible capacity, without proper checks to limit its exercise, and without providing any remedy whatever for the redemption of the issue, thus authorized, has been attended with evils of the most alarming character. These evils are so generally within the exclusive judgment of the amount of paper currency to be furnished to the people, and have the exclusive power to contract or expand their circulation at pleasure. Deputies and other ordinary creditors of banks, need no legislation for their protection. Every one who has direct dealings with those institutions, either as depositor or otherwise, enters into such engagements voluntarily for his own advantage, and may be safely left to his own vigilance, and the ordinary remedies of the law for its protection. But the millions of people engaged in industrial pursuits, the farmer—the mechanic—the merchant—and the laboring man—are under an impious necessity to receive for their merchandise and their labor, the ordinary paper currency of the country. It is impossible for persons of this description to investigate the conduct of every institution whose notes are in circulation. But no investigation could save them from the losses arising from the default and frauds of bank officers and the insolvency of bank borrowers.

The holders of bank notes have peculiar claims on the attention of the government. They are involuntary creditors, who are forced to receive the notes authorized by the government. They are not so fortunate as the holders of gold and silver. They must trust the banks from any hope of gain. They have no profit in passing the notes which they would not have had in passing gold or silver coin. They are entitled to the entire community, and the humblest and ignorant are a reliance on the government for their redemption in coin. The whole people are therefore deeply interested in the security of the circulation allowed by law, although many of them may never have a share of bank notes, or been within the hearing of its circulation. The government has a high moral obligation to require ample and available security for its redemption.

The securities of loans issued by the government, or by the States, are of a different nature to be fixed upon, with the power to require additional deposits of security. In true sense, as the loans deposited in the market, would be as safe and available as any guaranty which could be provided.

The securities of loans made by the government, or by the States, are of a different nature to be fixed upon, with the power to require additional deposits of security. In true sense, as the loans deposited in the market, would be as safe and available as any guaranty which could be provided.

The new loans thus authorized, redeemable at the expiration of twenty years, with the banking privilege attached to them, would undoubtedly sell at a high premium. The proceeds of their sale should be applied to the redemption of the present debt, and the residue, amounting to more than seventeen millions of dollars. Under this system the State loans would no longer be held by foreigners, and the semi-annual shipments of specie, to pay interest, would therefore cease.

The amount of currency would be limited to the amount actually wanted, the danger from expansion, which have heretofore stimulated the incursions to embark in ruinous enterprises, in overtrading, and in extravagance in their expenditures, would be greatly lessened, if not entirely removed. The security of their circulation, in the hands of a high and responsible officer of the State, with authority to sell them for the purpose of redeeming the circulation, the power of the banks to arrest specie payments at their own pleasure would be at an end. The system proposed in the present bill, is a subject of the most important character, and the people are at present prepared for it. The duty of securing the community from losses continuously arising from specie currency, cannot be longer neglected without the manifest disregard of the public interests. The subject is therefore committed to your early attention.

The report of the Commissioners appointed to contract for and superintend the erection of a monument to the memory of citizens of Pennsylvania, who were slain or lost their lives in the late war with Mexico, will inform the Legislature of the progress of their work. After receiving proposals for the erection of the monument, and the adoption of a plan, it was determined, in view of the limited and inadequate appropriation made for the accomplishment of the purpose, by the last Legislature, to postpone the erection of the monument until further legislation could be had. It is the opinion of the Commissioners that such a monument as would do credit to the State, and honor to the living and the dead, cannot be built for less than thirty thousand dollars. If the Legislature should concur in this opinion, the appropriation should be increased accordingly.

The report of the State Librarian will inform you of the progress made in the catalogue and condition of the Library, which has grown to be an important and valuable institution. I would commend to your attention the suggestions of the Librarian.

The report of the Attorney General, which will be laid before you, will exhibit the operations of the Law Department of the Government for the year ending on the 31st of March, 1857, which requires the Attorney General to keep an office at Harrisburg, and which provides that all bills do not to the Commonwealth shall be collected by that officer, and that he shall be a highly respectable and successful man. And the improved state of our finances in its comparative degree during the past year, and the progress of the State Treasury, will be laid before you, which will detail the present state of our affairs, and the progress of the State Treasury.

Reporting myself to be fully committed to the abolition of paper currency, and to the improvement on the laws in force at the time of its passage. One of its best features, and one that should be strictly enforced, is that the system is self-supporting. In no contingency should the Treasury be charged with the cost of the currency. It is the duty of the Legislature to the elaborate reports of the Auditor General and State Treasurer, relating to the Finance of the State, which will be laid before you, I will refrain from giving expression to my views on the importance of a change in the mode of keeping and disbursing the public moneys.

The State Treasurer receives and disburses between four and five millions of dollars annually, and it is not inconceivable to suppose that there is a balance in his hands of one million of dollars. The bond of the Treasurer is not for eight thousand dollars. He deposits the money of the State wherever he pleases, and it is paid exclusively on his order. The State Treasurer is not a public officer, and his duties are not defined by law. He is not a public officer, and his duties are not defined by law. He is not a public officer, and his duties are not defined by law.

The various charitable and reformatory institutions which have heretofore been established in this State, such as the State Lunatic Asylum, at Harrisburg, the Western Penitentiary, at Pottsville, the House of Refuge, at Philadelphia, the Pennsylvania Training School for the Blind and Deaf and Dumb, at Philadelphia, the Northern Home for Friendless Children, at Philadelphia, and the various other institutions, have been established in this State, and have been doing good for many years. It is the duty of the Legislature to provide for the support of these institutions, and to see that they are properly managed.
