

Poetical

HYMN TO THE PEOPLE.

BY C. D. STAFFORD.

Not to be met with ordinary strength, To wield the sword and wear the plume, Or rise to conquer's fame at length, Proclaim the good or make the brave.

To have the power to bide the scorn, And rise above the hate and spite, To those to wealth and title born, In the crowd's scornage of our life.

What are the swords that prop a king— The banners in his army's van— To strength of soul, that dares to spring And show the monarch in the van?

Kings and the mightiest men of arms, Strong as the heads of armies hide, Sport as they may with fortune's charms, They are life leaves upon the tide.

In dim of olden splendor lies, The feast of silence and decay, While the true world heart beateth high And thrives itself upon to-day.

Give us the man whose hands have leaved The corn sown to the mellow soil, Whose feet the forest depths have trod, Whose brow is nobly crown'd with toil.

THE KIDNAP HAND.

BY EMMA D. N. SOUTHWORTH.

'Have you got through?' asked the man at the door, rapping impatiently. 'No, no,' said I, as directed. 'He resumed his tramping up and down and I went back to my patient—She beckoned me to come close, and she perched—

'Save my child! the living one I mean! hide her! Oh, hide her from him! When he demands the babe, give him the poor little dead one—he cannot hurt that. And he will not know there was another. Oh! hide and save my child.'

'Master, I was used to queer doings, but this was a little the queerest. But if I was to conceal that child in order to save it, it was necessary to stop its mouth, for it was squalling like a wild cat. So I took a vial of paragon from my pocket and gave it a drop, and it went off to sleep like an angel, and I wrapped it up warm and lay it along with my shawl and bonnet, in a dark corner. Just then the man wrapped again.

'Come in, master,' said I. 'No, bring me the babe,' he said. 'I took up the dead infant. Its mother kissed its brow and dropped tears upon its little cold face; and I carried it to the man outside.

'Is it asleep?' the willian asked me. 'Yes, master,' said I, as I put it, well wrapped up, in his arms, 'very sound asleep.'

door stood ajar I went into a narrow, dark passage, the man all the while at my heels. He opened a door on the left side, and made me go into a dark room. Just then the unfortunate child, that had been moving restlessly began to wail! Well it might, poor starving thing!

'What a that?' says the miscreant, under his breath and stopping short. 'It is not nothing, sir, says I, and 'hush h' to the baby. But the poor little wretch roused a squall.

'What is the meaning of this?' says he. 'Where did that child come from? Why the demon don't you speak?' and with that he seized me again by the scruff of the neck and shook me.

'Oh, master, for the love of heaven don't say I, 'this is only a poor, unfortunate infant as its parents wanted to get out of the way, and hired me to take care of it. And I have had it wrapped up under my shawl all the time 'cept when I was in your house, when I put it to sleep in the corner.'

'Humph! and you had that child concealed under your shawl when I first stopped you in the wood?' 'In course, Master,' says I. 'Where is it?' 'Master,' says I, 'it's—it's a dead baby. I hid it in another place ready.'

'He broke out into a rude, scornful laugh, and seemed not half to believe me and yet not to care about questioning me too closely. He made me sit down in the dark, and went out and turned the key on me. I wet my finger with the paragon and put it to the baby's lips, to quiet its pangs of hunger. Then I heard a whispering in the next room. Now my eyesight never was good, but to make up for it I believe I have the sharpest ears ever was, and I don't think anybody could have heard that whispering but me. I saw a little glimmer of light through the chinks that showed me where the door was, and so I crept up to it and put my ear to the key-hole. Still they whispered so low that no ears could hear them but my sharp ones. They were talking about seeing some woman and child. I should have been once if they hadn't called the woman Kate. My willian offered 'em for fifty dollars, but 'tuther willian wouldn't give a cent. He told my willian, as he called 'Capitola, that he'd take 'em off his hands and no more. And then they threatened each other, and went out of my hearing. And in the morning the willian came and took me and the child off in a shay and drove down a long way to the beach, and hailed a vessel on the river and took us aboard and sold us to the captain right afore my eyes, and then went ashore, and we was carried off out to sea, though I cried, and 'plained, and spatulated all the time.

I was known, and despite the evil looks of them willians, and for this cause I lived in money many by penny. 'One ever helped me but the lad Herbert Greyson. Whenever he came from sea, he sought me out, and made a little present to me or Cap. 'Cap, master, was the Captain, the child. The reason I gave her that name was because on that ring that name was on the washed mother's hand was the two names—Eugene—'Capitola.'

'Well, master, the last time Herbert Greyson came home, he gave me five dollars, and that, with what I had saved, was enough to pay my passage to Norfolk. I left my little 'Cap in the care of the people of the house—she was big enough to pay for her keep in work—and I took passage for Norfolk. When I got there I fell ill spent all my money, and was at last taken to the poor house. Six months passed away before I was discharged, and then six more before I had earned and saved money enough to pay my way on here.

'I reached here three days ago, and found a wheat field growing where my cottage had been used to burn, and all my old clothes dead, all except old Hat, who has served me and given me shelter. Sir, my story is done—make what you can of it, said the willian, nodding down in her bed as if utterly exhausted.

'Right! Now tell me, my good soul, do you know, from what you were enabled to observe, what house that was where 'Capitola was born?' 'I am on my oath. No, sir, I do not know; but—' 'You suspect?' 'The woman nodded.

'It was—' said old Hurricane, stooping and whispering a name that was heard by no one but the sick woman. 'She nodded again, with a look of intense meaning.

'Does your old hostess, Hat, know or suspect any thing of this story?' inquired Major Warfield. 'Not a word! No soul but yourself has heard it.'

PARTING WITH A CHILD.

From the New Orleans Delta, January 18th.

A painful case, and rather a curious one, has been decided in one of our District Courts. It was a contest between parents for the possession of a natural child. An unmarried woman sued out a writ of Habeas corpus, to recover possession of her child, a little boy two years and a half old, which she said was illegally kept from her by a certain citizen and his wife.

In the trial, it appeared that this citizen was the father of the child, which had been handed over to him by the mother, when it was a trouble and a disgrace to her. He had accepted it, and was doing for it all that his father could do for a lawful child; besides which, he loved it and petted it fondly. This gentleman's wife, with a magnanimity quite rare in such cases (knowing, as she did, about the child), had advised it also, and loved it as if it were her own. On trial, the father was not able to prove that the mother had given the child properly to him for good and all.

On Monday, the Judge decided the case, which was, that the child should be delivered to its mother. With this order of the Court, and accompanied by the mother, a Deputy Sheriff went to the residence of the father to get the child, and pass it over to its mother. He described the scene by his visit, as the most touching and distressing thing he ever saw. The adopted mother turning pale at death, tried to put him up upon delicate pretences, and to delay the separation, as long as possible—Taking the child up stairs, to wash him and dress him, she locked him up, and told the Deputy he could not have him till her husband came home.

When the husband arrived, the Deputy politely explained his business, and was politely treated. The gentleman went up stairs, and after a while, came down with his wife and the child. The little fellow was nicely dressed; and his adopted mother brought down with him a whole wardrobe of the daintiest little clothes, and duff, etc., besides a number of toys which had been purchased for the pet at Christmas. All these she laid on the floor at his feet, without saying a word; too proud to display either affection or grief before the hated mother of her pet, yet showing symptoms of the most intense suppressed agony. The father acted as became a man under such circumstances; allowing the child to go quietly and without fuss. The mother took the little one in her arms, the Deputy gathered up the clothing and toys, and they left. The door closed quietly behind them, and the more real mother was forever the reaved of the dearest object of her affections.

'The first year of married life is a most important era in the history of husband and wife. Generally, as it is spent, so is almost all subsequent existence. The wife and husband thus assimilate their views and their desires, or conjure up their dislikes, and so add fuel to their prejudices and animosities forever afterward.'

'I have heard some where,' says Rev. Dr. Wise, in his 'Bridal Greetings,' 'of a bridegroom who gloried in his eccentricities. He requested his bride to accompany him into the garden a day or two after the wedding. He then threw a line over the roof of their cottage. Giving his wife one end of it, he retreated to the other side and exclaimed: "Pull the line!" "Pull the line!" she replied. "I can't with all your might!" shouted the whimsical husband. But in vain were all the efforts of the bride to pull over the line, so long as her husband held on the opposite end. But when he came round, and both pulled at one end, it came over with great ease.
